South Korea court reinstates as acting leader

South Korea's constitutional court has dismissed the impeachment of Prime Minister Han Duck-soo, reinstating him as acting president. Han briefly led the country after President Yoon Suk Yeol's suspension but was impeached by lawmakers for blocking judicial appointments. On Monday, the court ruled 7-1 in Han's favor, allowing him to resume duties. Meanwhile, South Korea awaits the court's decision on Yoon's impeachment, which could either remove him permanently or restore him to office. Protests in Seoul have intensified, with supporters and opponents of Yoon rallying in anticipation of the verdict.

U.S. and Russian officials began talks in Saudi Arabia to negotiate a Black Sea maritime ceasefire as a step toward a broader Ukraine peace deal. Led by Andrew Peek for the U.S. and Grigory Karasin for Russia, the discussions follow U.S.-Ukraine talks and President Trump's recent calls with Zelenskiy and Putin. While skepticism remains among European allies, Trump expressed optimism about de-escalation. Talks also address territorial control, peacekeeping measures, and the return of Ukrainian children taken by Russia. U.S. envoy Steve Witkoff dismissed fears of further Russian expansion, emphasizing a different geopolitical landscape than WWII.

Gene testing firm 23andMe has filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy to facilitate its sale after struggling to find a sustainable business model. CEO Anne Wojcicki resigned but remains on the board. The company, which went public in 2021 but never turned a profit, saw its valuation briefly reach $6 billion. It previously laid off 40% of its workforce and faced mass resignations from independent directors. Despite efforts to shift to a subscription model, its core DNA testing business fell short of expectations. The court-supervised sale aims to maximize the company's remaining value.
