Asian stocks see their worst rout in decades after Trump tariffs

Asian stocks plunged on Monday to levels not seen in decades, as global markets continue to reel from US President Donald Trump's tariffs. The Shanghai Composite was down more than 8% at one point, Hong Kong's dropped more than 13% and Japan's Nikkei 225 closed down by 7.8%. European markets too fell in early trading, with banks and defence firms seeing the biggest drops. This follows global slumps last week after Trump announced new tariffs between 10% and 46% on most countries. This is a blow for Asia's manufacturing hubs that count the US as a key market for exports ranging from clothes to cars.
