👉 Trump threatens 'severe consequences' if Putin blocks Ukraine peace

Tensions rise as Trump prepares to meet Putin in Alaska, warning of "severe consequences" if Russia rejects a ceasefire. Europe stresses Ukraine must be included in any land talks. Russian advances in the east increase pressure on Kyiv. The summit could either strengthen Ukraine's position or risk rewarding Russia, while long-term peace remains uncertain.

👉 Trump wants to extend federal control over Washington police

Trump's takeover of Washington's police and deployment of 800 National Guard troops marks an unprecedented use of presidential power, citing rising crime despite city data showing declines. Short-term, the move has increased arrests and federal oversight. Long-term, it risks legal challenges, political tension with Democratic cities, and tests the limits of executive authority in the U.S.

👉 China pharma firms turn to local reagent suppliers to cut costs and delivery times

China's pharmaceutical sector is shifting toward locally produced reagents as firms seek lower costs, faster delivery, and reduced reliance on imports amid tariff pressures. Domestic companies like Titan and Vazyme are benefiting, while Western suppliers such as Thermo Fisher, Merck, and Roche are relocating production to China. The market is expected to grow over 10% annually, but regulatory and technology constraints may slow full replacement of imports. This trend strengthens Chinese manufacturers and reshapes the industry landscape.
