China's Xi projects power at military parade with Putin and Kim

At a massive military parade in Beijing, Xi Jinping projected China's growing power alongside Russia's Vladimir Putin and North Korea's Kim Jong Un, signaling strong solidarity against the West. The event showcased China's advanced weaponry and emphasized its diplomatic and military ambitions, suggesting closer economic and defense cooperation with Moscow and Pyongyang. Analysts warn this could reshape Asia-Pacific security, challenge U.S. influence, and strengthen China's position as a global power, while also reinforcing domestic nationalism.

US military kills 11 people in strike on alleged drug boat from Venezuela, Trump says

The U.S. strike on a Venezuelan drug vessel, killing 11 people, marks a sharp escalation in Washington's approach to Caribbean drug trafficking. By destroying the boat rather than seizing it, the operation signals aggressive military tactics and heightens tensions with Venezuela, especially amid allegations linking the crew to President Maduro. The deployment of warships and surveillance assets suggests similar actions may follow, potentially disrupting trafficking but risking regional backlash and legal scrutiny over the use of lethal force.

Thousands of Israeli reservists report for duty as military chief clashes with ministers

Israel's plan to accelerate its offensive on Gaza City exposes sharp rifts between Netanyahu's cabinet, which demands quick gains, and military leaders warning of risks to hostages and overstretched forces. With 40,000 reservists mobilized, the campaign signals escalation amid soaring civilian deaths and famine in Gaza, fueling global criticism. The next phase hinges on whether political urgency or military caution prevails—either a costly urban assault with heavy humanitarian fallout, or a pause for negotiations that could preserve hostages but weaken Netanyahu's stance.
