A ceasefire between Israel and Hamas has taken effect, leading to the withdrawal of Israeli troops from several areas in Gaza. The truce comes after weeks of intense fighting that caused significant destruction and civilian casualties. While both sides have observed the ceasefire for now, tensions remain high, and the international community continues to call for lasting peace and humanitarian relief.

Beijing blames US for raising trade tensions, defends rare earth curbs

China has defended its recent export controls on rare earth elements, stating they are legitimate measures aimed at protecting national security, not outright bans. Officials emphasized that the controls target materials with potential military applications and are not retaliatory. Civilian-use exports that meet regulatory standards will still be allowed under a licensing system. The move comes amid rising trade tensions with the United States, which has criticized the restrictions and threatened new tariffs in response, escalating concerns over global supply chains.
