Shutdown could cost US economy $15 billion a week, Treasury says

Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent said the U.S. investment boom—driven by AI, tax incentives and tariffs—is “sustainable” and just beginning, but warned the two-week federal shutdown is now costing the economy up to $15 billion per week (correcting his earlier “per day” remark) and is “cutting into muscle.” He added the FY2025 deficit is smaller than FY2024’s $1.833 trillion, and said deficit-to-GDP could fall toward 3% over time, though Treasury hasn’t released the official figure (CBO pegs FY2025 at ~$1.817 trillion).

Anthropic aims to nearly triple annualized revenue in 2026, sources say

Anthropic expects its annualized revenue run rate to hit about $9B by end-2025 and targets $20B–$26B in 2026, driven largely by enterprise demand (roughly 80% of revenue) from 300,000+ business customers. The company says run rate is nearing $7B now (up from $5B in August). New, cheaper models like Haiku 4.5 and products such as Claude Code (near $1B run rate) underpin growth, as Anthropic expands globally and into government.
