Australia signs key defence deal with Papua New Guinea

Australia and Papua New Guinea (PNG) have signed a new security pact allowing mutual defence cooperation and shared access to military facilities. The agreement, signed in Canberra by Prime Minister Anthony Albanese and PNG's James Marape, enables up to 10,000 Papua New Guineans to serve in Australia's military with a path to citizenship. The deal comes amid rising Chinese influence in the Pacific, though Marape said it was based on geography and shared history, not geopolitics. He emphasised transparency with China, affirming Australia as PNG's "security partner of choice." Albanese said the pact reinforces peace and stability in the Pacific.

Trump sends troops from California to Portland after court denies deployment

President Donald Trump redeployed 200 California National Guard troops from Los Angeles to Portland after a judge blocked his attempt to send new forces there. The move, bypassing court orders, sparked outrage from California Governor Gavin Newsom, who called it an "abuse of power" and vowed legal action. Illinois Governor JB Pritzker said Trump was also sending Texas National Guard troops to several states. The Pentagon said the deployment supports federal immigration enforcement amid ongoing protests. Critics accused Trump of using the military as a political weapon, while the White House defended the action as protecting law enforcement and federal assets.

Cavers safe after 30-hour rescue during Storm Amy

Three experienced cavers were rescued after being trapped for over 30 hours in North Yorkshire's Dowber Gill Passage during Storm Amy. The alarm was raised late Thursday when they failed to return, prompting a major operation involving more than 100 volunteers from the Upper Wharfedale Fell Rescue Association. Rescuers faced severe flooding, rough terrain, and dangerous water levels. By the time the men were located early Friday, their original exit route was submerged, forcing a difficult retreat. Team leader Derek Hammond said they could have been rescued hours earlier if not for worsening weather, describing the conditions as "appalling" and life-threatening.
