Trump says he doubts US will go to war with Venezuela

US President Donald Trump downplayed the likelihood of war with Venezuela but implied Nicolás Maduro's presidency could be ending. Speaking to CBS' 60 Minutes, Trump said he doubted the US would go to war but criticized Maduro for treating the US badly. The comments come amid ongoing US strikes on suspected drug-smuggling boats in the Caribbean, aimed at curbing drug flows into the US. Since early September, at least 64 people have been killed in these operations. When asked about potential strikes on land, Trump did not rule them out, refusing to specify any future actions regarding Venezuela.

Clooney says Harris replacing Biden was a 'mistake'

George Clooney called it a "mistake" for Kamala Harris to replace Joe Biden as the Democratic nominee in the last US presidential election. Speaking to CBS, he said Harris faced a tough challenge running against her own record, making her campaign difficult. Clooney expressed no regrets about his July 2024 New York Times op-ed urging Biden to quit, saying he would write it again. He argued that Biden, though accomplished, could not win the battle against time. Hunter Biden later criticized Clooney for questioning his father's mental sharpness. Harris has suggested she might run for president in the future.
