Stارmer sending deliberate and meaningful message in update

Starmer used the update to send a deliberate and politically significant message: Britain will not choose between the US and the EU, but it is clearly seeking closer ties with Europe. By highlighting the upcoming UK-EU summit, he framed deeper cooperation with the bloc as an economic priority. Although Labour still rules out rejoining the single market or customs union, the government appears intent on moving as close as possible to the EU from outside it. In doing so, Starmer is bringing old Brexit-era arguments back to the center of British politics.

Trump considers quitting NATO, says Iran war could end soon

President Donald Trump is considering withdrawing from NATO, criticizing the alliance's military support in the war with Iran and describing it as a "paper tiger." He said the conflict could end within two to three weeks ahead of a planned national address, while Tehran says it is prepared for at least six months of fighting. On the ground, Yemen's Houthis said they launched missiles toward southern Israel in coordination with Iran and Hezbollah, as US and Israeli strikes on Tehran continued. Oil prices fell and stocks rose, though uncertainty around reopening the Strait of Hormuz remains.

Iranian missile hit oil tanker in Qatari waters, Qatar says

Qatar said an Iranian cruise missile struck the Aqua 1 oil tanker, leased by QatarEnergy, in Qatari waters on Wednesday, after two other missiles were intercepted, with no casualties reported. The tanker was located 17 nautical miles north of the Ras Laffan industrial hub, and the strike caused damage above the waterline without any environmental impact. The incident comes amid growing threats to Gulf maritime traffic and expanding attacks on oil and gas facilities, as the war has disrupted around 17% of Qatar's LNG export capacity, threatening supplies to Europe and Asia.
