How did Banksy put up a statue in central London?

Banksy installed a new statue in Waterloo Place, central London, using a low-loader truck, traffic cones and an experienced crew during the early hours. The artwork shows a suited man stepping forward while blinded by a flag covering his face. Banksy later confirmed the work through Instagram. Westminster City Council said it had not granted permission but has placed barriers around the statue to protect it while keeping it accessible to the public.

Iran's Foreign Minister Holds Regional Calls

Iranian Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi held calls with counterparts from Turkey, Egypt, Qatar, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Azerbaijan to brief them on efforts to end the US-Israel war with Iran, according to Tasnim. The calls came as Iran reportedly sent a new negotiation proposal to the United States through Pakistani mediators. Araghchi also spoke with EU foreign policy chief Kaja Kallas about diplomatic efforts to reopen the Strait of Hormuz and discuss long-term security arrangements.

Trump Threatens to Cut US Troops in Europe

President Donald Trump is considering reducing US troops in Germany, Italy and Spain amid tensions with European leaders over the Iran war. Germany, Italy and Spain host nearly 53,000 US troops, making any withdrawal politically and logistically difficult. While the president and Pentagon can shape deployment decisions, Congress can restrict major reductions through legislation and funding. US bases in Europe also serve Washington's wider military interests, including operations in the Middle East, making a large withdrawal unlikely to be simple.
