Venezuela earthquakes kill at least 32, with 700 injured, as buildings destroyed across Caracas

Back-to-back earthquakes of 7.2 and 7.5 magnitude struck west of Caracas, killing at least 32 people and injuring around 700, according to acting President Delcy Rodríguez. Rescue teams are searching collapsed buildings in the capital, where people were heard calling for help from the rubble. Power outages affected buildings, and the metro system was fully closed. The quakes were felt as far as Bogotá, Colombia. The US said it was immediately sending search and rescue teams, medical resources and humanitarian aid.

Senate walks back rebuke of Trump over Iran war

The US Senate reversed course after earlier backing a measure to limit President Donald Trump's military authority over the Iran war. A similar war powers resolution failed after Republicans Rand Paul and Bill Cassidy shifted their positions following pressure from Trump and briefings from JD Vance and Steve Witkoff. Trump welcomed the vote, saying it strengthened his negotiating position with Iran. Some Democrats argued Congress should still have a role in preventing renewed military action, especially despite a preliminary agreement with Tehran. The final vote was 47-50-1.

European leaders pledge unity after recent tensions ahead of NATO summit

European leaders met in Berlin and reaffirmed their commitment to strengthening Europe's role in NATO ahead of the July summit in Ankara. German Chancellor Friedrich Merz said Europe must reinforce the alliance's European pillar and avoid unilateral defence policies. The meeting followed tensions with Donald Trump over NATO, Iran and US troop levels in Europe, as well as disagreements among European partners over defence projects and Ukraine talks. Leaders also paid tribute to outgoing British Prime Minister Keir Starmer for rebuilding ties with Europe after Brexit.
